

Complete branch coverage is important to make sure all code functions correctly, having untested branches can lead to unexpected results as it may not be obvious when code is not functioning as intended, when all branches are covered this is avoided as it will be easy to see when something doesn't function as intended due to tests failing